To whom it may concern,

I would like you to reconsider the current proposed final judgement. The current judgement does not describe broadly enough the correct conduct Microsoft must follow. For example, the definition of "Microsoft Middleware" may allow something as simple as a version change to make certain restrictions null and void. This would allow Microsoft to continue with its current practices. Also, the PFJ should encourage multiple operating systems and products for Intel platforms, not simply force Microsoft to comply with OEM requests. Thank you for your time and please consider my opinion when making your final decision.
